British Hardwoods Open Day

I counted four Club members at the open day in Keighley on Saturday. Sorry if I missed any others, it was very busy in the morning, probably with people looking for the best bargains early on, steadily dying down during the day. A very good variety of stalls showing what can be done with wood, and metal, involving woodturning, carving, marquetry, axe work, fretsaw, pyrography, bio-ethanol, welding, and a lot of ingenuity. A very good place for picking up ideas, both for things to make and for how to present things for sale. And Sleepy Jake gave a brilliant performance of guitar and vocal blues throughout the day.

I didn't take many photos on the day, but here are a few. The carved wooden feather is a challenge I might take up, and I bought some veneers from the Leeds Marquetry Group if anyone fancies having a go. The odd looking carved man is actually a work-in-progress self portrait of one of the carvers – he did some modelling during the day. The ears will probably be done last.

Three photos from John Whiteley: a ribbon twist Jarrah bud vase, spalted beech textured bowl, and a rhododendron (the stock from Castle Howard) lamp.
